Monviso 3841m

Description

For its size and unmistakable shape, the Monviso is called the Stone King. It does indeed rules over the surrounding mountains and seen from some perspectives appears to be the highest top of the western alpine arch.

The ascent happens in two days, the first one dedicated to reach the lodge Quintino Sella, hiking through a beautiful path through the meadows, small lakes and morains. The hike of the second day is way more alpinistic and consider the circumnavigation towards the South of the mountain through a via ferrata (equipped climbing paths)and the ascent to the top through the southern side.

The regular way, without ever turning to extreme, is complex and rich in rock segments that lead the alpinists to move with caution and roped together. For that same reason, the descent is equally long and demanding so, as you say, "when the top is reached, the journey is not over yet".
